Sentence of Day in Jail and $40 Fine.

Witness at Hirshfield Inquiry Says $26,300 Was to Help Get Sergeancies.

Frank M. Gould, son of Edwin Gould and two years out of Yale, spent four hours in the Tombs yesterday. He was sent there and fined $40 besides for speeding in Park avenue. He rode to the prison with twelve assorted pickpockets and peddlers, and was handcuffed to one of them. He was fingerprinted. He took all the degrees without fussing. The Tombs received him at noon and discharged day. He spent the first two hours of his term in a cell, the second two-flex exercise period—marching up and down a corridor and in conversation with two lawyers sent by his father. The lawyers protected his exit. Photographers stood on the Center street curb, their cameras planted in the rain.

As the steel door swung open one of the attorneys unfurled an umbrella and lowered it as a screen around the young man. Gould held a newspaper in front of his face. But the man stepped on the gas instead and streaked down the avenue, swing-ing around the Grand Central station, crossing the Forty-second street viaduct and swerving westward into Fortieth street, which is a one way path for east-bound traffic. Doyle, on his fast mount, overtook the fugitive there and this time he stopped.

"Let's see your license," said Doyle to the driver, who replied: "Oh, let's fix it up. Come on and have supper with me." There were two young men in the car. Neither would give his name. Doyle called a patrolman of the East Thirty-fifth street station and the party drove to the station house. There both occupants of the speeding car again demurred at identifying themselves, but the driver eventually showed a license proving him to be Frank M. Gould. His companion said he was a broker. As there was no charge against him his name was not taken. A summons was given to Gould and he drove away. In court yesterday Gould gave his occupation as that of "assistant secretary." He is assistant secretary and a director of the St. Louis Southwestern Raliway Company, of whose board his father is chairman. He is 23 years old.
